Are deceitful. Humanity is too prone to ped in the sinuous and velvety meshes weven by the smooth tongue of the over-realous credit salesman—the head of the family often allows himself to be led into purchasing a big bill of furniture, especially as the time of payment is haloed over with a beautiful dreamy sort of hazy indefiniteness that dreamy sort of hazy indefinitioness that is exceedingly enticing. But things are soon cleared up before his eyes and he awakes to find that he has raid just about two prices for his furniture. But what else can he expect? Indiscriminate credit results in losses, which must be allowed for in determining prices.

The honest ones are made to pay for the loss due to their direitet neighbors. Now, all this talk is not because we Now, all this talk is not because we don't believe in credit-for we do-in fact, we give credit—but we don't charge any more to credit customers than we do to cash customers. We don't give credit to everybody—only to re-sponsible parties. Hence we lose no money on irresponsible people, and so, of money on irresponsible people, and so, of course, don't have to extort our profit from a few honest ones. You know our cash prices—they are famously lew—well, they're identical with our credit prices. Another thing about our credit system is that you have no legal paraphernalis or notes or interest to bother with. Our credit is an accommodation—not a lot of "red tape" to the you up with. Everything you want to furnish the inside of your house is here—all on one immense floor.

NO LONGER A MYSTERY. Little Doubt That Frank Bowle's Murder ers Have Been Caught.

Special Dispatch to The Evening Star.

Manlbono, Md., April 3.—The Bowie murder no longer remains a mystery. Frank M. Bowie was murdered not for his money, but for other reasons, and the evidence thus far obtained indicates strongly if it does not prove distinctly that the crime was committed by Daniel Barber, one of the prisoners now in jail, and that William Pinkney, another of the prisoners, was either present at the killing or was at least an accessory after the fact.

The latest arrest made was that of Ella Pinkney, wife of one of the prisoners. She was lodged in jail on Saturday and is being held as a witness rather than as a criminal, although she knew of the crime after it was committed

Her husband, she said, told Barber that the watch would get him in trouble, and after discussing the matter she said the watch was broken in a number of pieces and she threw them in the branch. The crystal was kept for the reason that her husband knew of some person who had a watch minus a crystal, and he thought the one his friend had.

While Mrs. Pinkney was telling her story and helping weave the rope about her husband's neck he, too, was doing more talking than was good for him. While he was telling stories which he thought would exonerate himself he was showing a guilty knowledge which will, in all probability, require more than human evidence to convince a jury that he is an innocent man.

It is true that he denies having been present when the crime was committed, but he knew of the watch and also of Barber's feelings and At least that is the substance of his statement which puts Barber in more than an embarrase which puts Barber in more than an embarrassing situation.

Among other things he tells of Barber's intention to murder Mr. Bowie before he finally succeeded, and it was all because Mr. Bowie had a charge against him of stealing meat. The alleged stolen meat was in the jail as evidence against him, and the case would in all probability have been called this week. To remove the case it was necessary to remove the man who made the charge, and this he determined to do some time ago if the statements of Pinkney are true.
